ABSTRACT

This study uses a variety of cartographic resources to identify potential archaeological and historical resources in Georgetown County. Resources used included eighteenth, nineteenth, and early twentieth century maps, plats, topographic quadrangles, and navigation charts. Sites identified included plantation settlements, churches, villages, slave settlements, cemeteries, industrial sites (such as mills, gins, and tar kilns), as well as a few underwater sites, such as wrecks.

A total of 810 potential historical sites were identified through this study. Of these, only 54 (or less than 7%) have been previously identified by archaeological field investigations. Consequently, at least 756 potential new sites have been identified through this work.

The goal of this research is to document the usefulness and cost-effectiveness of this approach as an initial planning tool. It is intended to guide, not replace, both intensive historical research and in-field surveys. Potential developers, whether private or public, can utilize this information to better understand the implications of a proposed development on the cultural resources of Georgetown County. Planners can use the information to document the need for more intensive investigations prior to municipal, county, or state permitting.

In addition, the compilation of this information will also be of use to researchers and genealogists working in the Georgetown County area. The information concerning different settlements can be used to identify lost place names, changing ownership patterns, and settlement patterns of Georgetown's white and black population.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work was partially funded by a National Park Service Survey and Planning Grant administered by the South Carolina Department of Archives and History. Without this major grant, the project would not have been possible. We wish to especially thank Ms. Susan McGahee, Mr. Stephen Skelton, and Mr. Lee Tippet for their support and interest in the preservation of Georgetown County's resources.

Funding was also provided by the Georgetown County Council, upon recommendation of the County Administrator, Mr. Gordon W. Hartwig. We express our appreciation to all of the members of the County Council for their support and commitment to the preservation of Georgetown's resources. Similar assistance was provided by the City of Georgetown, through the auspices of Mr. Boyd Johnson, the Assistant City Administrator. Again, it has been exciting that the City is interested in learning more about its early history and exploring ways to preserve its heritage for future generations.

The Waccamaw Regional Planning and Development Council also supported this project, seeing it as an opportunity to integrate historic and archaeological resources into their planning efforts for the region. In particular, we want to thank Mr. Bill Schwartzkopf, Planning Director, for his enthusiasm and assistance throughout the project.

The South Carolina Coastal Council expressed considerable interest in, and support of, this project. The base mapping for the project was provided by that office and we want to thank Mr. Fritz Aichele, Staff Cartographer and Mr. Steve Synder, Director of Planning and Certification for their commitment to this project. In addition, we want to thank both Dr. Wayne Beam, Executive Director of the South Carolina Coastal Council and William W. Jones, Esq., for their support and interest in the preservation of South Carolina's historic resources.

A number of agencies and institutions also worked with Chicora Foundation to make this project a success. We need to thank the staff of the South Carolina Department of Archives and History Search Room for their assistance obtaining copies of various plats; the staff of the South Caroliniana Library, especially Mr. James Hill; and the staff of the South Carolina Historical Society. Work was also conducted at the Georgetown County Register of Mesne Conveyances and the Charleston County Register of Mesne Conveyances. Over the past several years Chicora Foundation has collected a large quantity of data from the Cartographic Branch of the National Archives. They have consistently provided dependable, professional service.

While a number of individuals have helped whenever and however requested, we assume full responsibility for what will certainly be gaps in the coverage. We hope that this study will be of use to those responsible for preservation planning in Georgetown County.

INTRODUCTION

Scope and Goals

Georgetown County is one of South Carolina's rapidly growing coastal areas with an economy consisting of an interrelationship of light industry and tourism components. The change forecasted by the year 2020 will place many of Georgetown County's historical resources at risk. Ironically, it is the very nature of these endangered resources which is drawing more people to the county.

Although there are over 364 recorded archaeological and historical sites in Georgetown County, nearly 65% represent sites recorded for specific development projects (Keith Derting, personal communication 1993). These are sites identified, relatively speaking, at the very latest stages of the planning efforts, when there is the least flexibility to incorporate site preservation.

Discussions with the staff of the South Carolina Coastal Council revealed that they were unlikely to require those requesting permits to conduct historical or archaeological investigations in the absence of clear evidence that such remains were to be found in the project area. It appears that the Army Corps of Engineers has increasingly taken a similar stance, reducing the level and frequency of cultural resources investigations.

While a considerable amount of archaeological research has been conducted at some of the Waccamaw Neck developments (such as Chicora's extensive research at Willbrook, Oatland, and Turkey Hill plantations reported in Trinkley 1987, 1993 and similar work at a portion of Midway Plantation reported in Adams 1993), much less work has been conducted in the interior of the county. As the Waccamaw Neck region is built out, it will be these interior areas which will begin to be developed. Prior to this study there was little information available concerning the potential historic resources of the vast majority of the county.

It is clear that information, at the earliest possible stage of development planning, is essential if Georgetown's fragile historic and archaeological resources are to be preserved. In addition, the ability to integrate historical resources into early development planning assists the development community. It minimizes misunderstanding, allows for greater flexibility in the planning process, ensures that costly delays are not encountered, and allows rapid permitting.

Many developers are finding that, contrary to the popular misconception, development and preservation are not at odds. In fact, preservation is good business.

In an area such as Georgetown, preservation can, in fact, be big business, centered on heritage based tourism. A Southern Living survey found that historic sites are number 1 on the agenda of its readers when they go touring. And a survey by the National Tour Association of travelers over the age of 50 found that over half favor trips to historical sites and nearly two-thirds on group tours want to visit heritage sites. With tourism South Carolina's second largest retail industry, these statistics clearly indicate the importance of preservation.

Individuals are also more inclined to live where there is a legitimate sense of heritage and where there is clear evidence that both the natural and cultural environment has been respected. A Golin/Harris Group of Chicago poll suggests that Americans are willing to pay the costs associated with the preservation of our natural and cultural environment. There is a close marketing match between those intimately interested in preservation and those purchasing upscale coastal real estate and vacation homes.

Preservation is also a subtle, but significant aspect of our quality of life. It promotes economic development by providing the kind of area that attracts environmentally sensitive industry - the kinds of development that communities are proud to have as neighbors. A recent survey of mayors and economic development coordinators found that historic preservation was the seventh most often cited tool for economic development.

This study by Chicora Foundation will help planners, both private and governmental, incorporate preservation into the very early stages of new development in Georgetown County. And while such early integration is not a new concept, the technique used in this study is innovative.

Chicora Foundation has used eighteenth, nineteenth, and early twentieth century cartographic sources for Georgetown County to identify areas of historic occupation, including plantations, slave settlements, industrial sites (such as mills, salt vats, and tar kilns), fortifications, ferries, cemeteries, churches, and other cultural areas.

Some of these maps, as will be discussed in a following section, approach modern map standards for accuracy. Others provided only approximate locations. In a few cases maps, or portions of maps, were not used because they were so flawed as to be misleading or grossly inaccurate. The date range was intended to maximize the maps available and to provide coverage of the entire county.

These cartographic resources were used to generate a series of 21 7.5' United States Geological Survey topographic base maps (Figure 1), showing well defined areas of special concern and keying these to a master list providing information on the type of site and the source document. In addition, a separate map, at a much larger scale, was created for the City of Georgetown to permit more convenient site identification in that area.

While the primary goal of this work was to create a document useful to planners, it would be naive to assume a separation between planning or management concerns and research issues. As will be discussed in greater detail, this study will be of use to those engaged in topics such as settlement or genealogical research. It also provides historians with a county-wide research base for the eighteenth, nineteenth, and early twentieth century development of Georgetown District.

Intended Uses

While the previous paragraphs have outlined, in broad terms, the "intended" use of this study, it is appropriate to very carefully specify the parameters of this study and how it should be used.

The presence of an identified site indicates that there is a strong probability that archaeological remains will be found in the area shown on the map. How exact the location is will depend on the nature of the source map. As a general guide, the smaller the scale, the more accurate the map and the more reliable the location shown on the topographic sheets. Likewise, nineteenth century maps tend to be more useful for precise locations than eighteenth century maps. Plats tend to offer more precise locations than county-wide maps.

The absence of an identified site at a potential development area, however, does not mean that there are no archaeological remains in the vicinity - only that none were found during this initial survey. In a somewhat similar survey conducted by Ferguson and Babson (n.d.), they found that only the plats of the larger plantations showed slave settlements. They remarked that it would be naive to assume that slaves didn't live and work at the other plantations as well. The same situation was found in this study. Cartographic sources tend to be best and most numerous for the area along the coast, becoming less accurate and less common for the interior areas. Hence, there will be many plantations not found on any cartographic sources. And there will be even more slave settlements not shown.

What this means is that while the accompanying maps are very useful for providing positive evidence of occupation, they cannot be relied on to provide negative evidence. Consequently, while these maps can, and should, be used as an initial guide, they should never be relied on to dismiss areas from further archaeological and historical consideration. The maps, however, can form the basis of additional site probability studies that may serve to refine our understanding of settlement strategies in the historic period.

Most conspicuously absent from the study are Native American sites, since these were typically not recorded on eighteenth or nineteenth century maps or plats. While the maps can be used with some degree of reliability to predict historic period settlement, they cannot be used to forecast the likelihood or density of Native American occupation from 12,000 B.C. through about A.D. 1700.

It should be unnecessary to mention that the information contained on the maps found in Appendix 1 is very sensitive and could be used to loot or destroy cultural remains, either for personal gain, spite, or to avoid various cultural resource protection statutes. Certainly all information can be misused. Presumably in a document with limited, and carefully controlled, professional circulation this will not be a problem. It remains appropriate, however, to caution all users that the information contained in this study should be considered confidential and should be distributed only on an established, need-to-know basis.

It is appropriate to remind those using the maps that the 1992 amendments to the National Historic Preservation Act, commonly called the Fowler Bill, prevent federal agencies from providing loans or grants, or issuing permits if historic properties or sites were demolished or destroyed to avoid compliance with Section 106 provisions. Misuse of these maps could result in denial of essential federal permits under section 479h-2(k) of NHPA.

Chicora Foundation maintains the copyright on this document and the accompanying maps. Under no circumstances may copies of this document or the attached topographic maps be made by any individual, agency, or organization. Distribution of such copies may be viewed as a violation of copyright protection. Requests to replace damaged or worn maps will be honored by Chicora Foundation when the original map is returned with the request.

Curation

The original mylar copies of the 19 topographic sheets covering Georgetown County are maintained by Chicora Foundation. Copies of all of the maps used in this study are also maintained by Chicora Foundation, as well as the primary curatorial facility (such as the South Caroliniana Library, National Archives, and so forth). If access to the original map is required, Chicora Foundation will be happy to provide assistance.

Copies of this study, and the associated maps, have been provided to the:

- Georgetown County Administrator, for distribution to the Planning Department,
- City of Georgetown, Assistant City Administrator,
- Waccamaw Regional Planning and Development Council,
- South Carolina Coastal Council, Cartographic Office, and
- South Carolina Department of Archives and History, Preservation Office.

RESEARCH METHODS

Cartographic Sources Used

It was the intention of this study to incorporate as many Georgetown area maps as possible. While the nineteenth century was viewed as the period of greatest significance, forming the core of the research, the time period was extended into the eighteenth century and into the first half the twentieth century.

Unlike some neighboring counties, such as Charleston, Georgetown's plat resources are somewhat limited. The records of the county suffered a major loss during the Civil War when records sent to Columbia for safe keeping were burned by Sherman. Some Georgetown plats are found in the Charleston Register of Mesne Conveyance, where they were apparently filed as duplicates. These were obtained by using index listings, including Georgetown County, Georgetown District, Waccamaw River, Black River, Pee Dee River, and Santee River.

The McCrady Plat collection, while dominated by Charleston materials, includes items from Georgetown. These were searched using the Combined Alphabetic Index developed by the South Carolina Department of Archives and History. Keywords included Georgetown County, Georgetown District, Waccamaw River, Black River, and Santee River.

Only 60% to 70% of the plats identified were incorporated into this study because of problems transferring the plat location to the topographic maps. While the plat scales were typically excellent, many plats provided sufficient topographic or cultural features (such as roads, bends in rivers, creeks, and so forth) to allow the location to be keyed with the topographic map. Many plats not useful in this project, however, would certainly be useful if the general location of the plantation were already known through more detailed historical research.

A large variety of other cartographic sources, primarily maps, were also used in the study. These range from almost schematic drawings of the eighteenth century to a series of excellent topographic charts made by the National Ocean Survey during the mid-nineteenth century to the early twentieth century War Department precursors of today's topographic maps.

All of the cartographic resources used in this study are listed in Table 1. Information included is the title (with an effort made to ensure that the map can be identified by the title), its date, and its scale.

All of the scales were converted to a representative fraction (RF) or ratio, for example, 1:40,000. This means that (along particular lines) 1 inch or 1 foot or 1 centimeter on the map represents 40,000 inches, feet, or centimeters on the earth's surface. As a point of reference 7.5' topographic maps (such as those included with this study) have a RF of 1:24,000 (or 1 inch to 2000 feet). Consequently, the smaller the second number in the RF, the more accurate the placement of features is likely to be.

Consistency of Methods and Identifications

Accuracy and validity of the maps used is keyed to more than simply the scale. Each historic feature location was transferred to the topographic maps using as many triangulation features as possible. At times this was simple. At other times, such as when creeks and rivers had dramatically changed locations, it could be difficult, or even impossible. The Black River presented a particular challenge since parts of its channel have changed dramatically over the past 200 years. The Sampit River both accreted and eroded portions of the area immediately south of the City of Georgetown. Likewise, there has been exceptional accretion at the north and south jetties of the Winyah Bay entrance, with three wrecks now incorporated into high tidal marsh.

Some maps also failed to provide any features for triangulation. In these cases it was sometimes possible to scale distances or use topographic features. Where there was an appreciable degree of doubt or uncertainty in the location of a historic site it was left off the topographic sheets. This seems preferable to promoting inaccurate locations. As an additional effort to maintain consistency, one individual located all of the sites, with a second individual running random checks of location. The degree of agreement was in excess of 98%.

Each site has been located as precisely as possible, allowing some minor buffer for errors in the calculations. Sites have been shown primarily as circled areas, although linear arrangements of structures are often shown as ovals. These cover from as little as 10 acres to as much as 70 acres.

Although these may sound incredibly large, it is important to understand the definition of a site. Typically a site is a plantation settlement, often including 10 or 20 structures. We have not attempted, in other words, to define the main house site, as opposed to the flanker sites, as opposed to outbuilding sites. All of these have been incorporated into one larger site.

The rationale for this is not simply that it makes the task of site placement easier (which of course it does). Rather, the primary rationale is the very nature of archaeological sites. Experience at a variety of Beaufort, Charleston, and Georgetown plantations has shown the folly of attempting to isolate distinct areas to the exclusion of others.

Plantation settlements, just like homes today, changed. Structures were built, others decayed or were torn down. Some, in the process of rebuilding, did not move off their original location, while others shifted about the landscape. Often there will be nineteenth century structures overlying the earlier eighteenth century settlement.

Of equal importance, there has been too much archaeological research which has failed to identify, or has ignored, the complexity of colonial and antebellum plantations. Too many investigations have identified only one or two features, such as the slave settlement and the main house, while other features, such as out buildings or isolated dwellings, have been lost.

Consequently, the multi-acre sites shown on the topographic maps represent the area where it is likely that scatters of the historic sites will be found. It is within these areas that survey, in the hopes of identifying the posited sites, should take place.

At the same time, it should be understood that simply because a ground disturbing activity is taking place outside, but adjacent to, an encircled area there should be no assurance that historically significant materials will not be encountered. These maps are guides and have not been field verified. Any activity within the immediate area of an encircled site should be examined in more detail.

One benefit of using a variety of maps is that settlement features and locations can be observed changing over time. An effort was made to ensure that sites compared were, in reality, the same site. In addition, an effort was made to present the data in a consistent format. For example, the statement "main house, 15 structures, 1 row with 6 structures" means that there were a total of 22 structures. To clearly indicate a repeat of structures, parenthesis have been used. For example, the statement "main house, 15 structures (7 in row)" means that there were a total of 16 structures.

When a map or plat indicated the owner's name that information is presented on the tables. In addition, we have included previous owners, when that information was provided by the map or plat. Likewise, adjacent owners are also mentioned. These names are found in the index following the sources cited section. This index also includes the names of plantations and settlements, churches, cemeteries, schools, and other features, when they were identified. There are also compilations of major site types, such as plantations, settlements, cemeteries, and schools.

The term "settlement" is used to indicate that the cartographer was showing some type of occupation, probably a plantation, but that no details regarding the number of buildings, their arrangement, or other landscape features were provided on the source map.

Many of the maps revealed very complex settlements and the information provided in this study is intended only to assist in initial planning. The number of structures may be taken to indicate, in a very general way, the extent and complexity of the site (recognizing that sites identified simply as a "settlement" will exhibit considerable diversity). In all cases it is recommended that the original source map be consulted to verify the exact location and the nature of the site identified.

A review of the sites identified will reveal that over 80% of the sites are plantation settlements, including main settlements, support buildings, and slave settlements. The remaining sites include cemeteries, industrial sites (such as rice mills, tar kilns, and salt vats), fortifications, docks, causeways, churches, and an occasional garden. Roads were not included, although other transportation features, such as landings, bridges, causeways and ferries, were.

Place Names

The goal of this study was not to compile a listing of place names in Beaufort County. Sources such as C.H. Neuffer's Names in South Carolina or Anonymous (1975) should be consulted for detailed information. However, as the work progressed it became apparent that the plats and maps did provide some additional information regarding lost place names. These are included here as Table 2.

FINDINGS

Archaeological Preservation

This study identified 808 historic sites in what is today Georgetown County as well as two sites which were found in counties immediately adjacent to Georgetown (Table 3 provides a complete listing of these sites, by topographic quad sheet). These include primarily plantation settlements, although other types of sites, such as cemeteries, churches, causeways, docks and wharfs, industrial sites, forts, and gardens are also included. Sites from the early eighteenth through early twentieth century are included in the study.

It was anticipated that with upwards of 364 archaeological sites identified through field investigations in Georgetown County, a number of these posited historic sites would have been identified through previous archaeological research. A similar study, conducted in Beaufort County, South Carolina, found that about 15% of the identified historical sites had already been found through archaeological field work. A comparison of the Georgetown County site locations with the archaeological site files at the South Carolina Institute of Archaeology and Anthropology revealed that relatively few of these sites, less than 7% in fact, have been previously identified and studied.

Consequently, this study assumes considerable importance in preservation planning for the county. It reveals that archaeological field investigations in Georgetown County have succeeded in identifying even fewer of the important historic resources of the area than similar work in Beaufort County.

By examining the modern topographic maps it can be seen that some of the posited sites have probably already been destroyed by development activities. Other sites, however, will be found in agricultural and forested areas of the county. In general, the character of the soils and topography, the nature of the drainages, and the pattern of land use has not been excessively detrimental to archaeological preservation. Lowry (1934) indicates that Georgetown suffered little or no erosion up to the early twentieth century. The erosion factors for most Georgetown soils are very low and the erosion rates for the region by various man-induced causes (logging, roads, and so forth) are much lower than elsewhere in the state (U.S. Department of Agriculture 1980:Table K-2). As in Beaufort County, it is possible that vandalism has caused greater damage to Georgetown's resources than natural events or agricultural activities (see "Many Sites Unprotected from Looters, The Beaufort Gazette, July 21, 1991, page 1-D).

Given the likelihood that many of the sites will exhibit relatively high site integrity, coupled with a broad range of research questions that the identified sites can address (discussed below), it is likely that a large number of the sites identified by this study are eligible for inclusion on the National Register for Historic Places. Some of the eligible sites (representing such sites as well preserved plantation complexes, Civil War fortifications, remains of Native American villages) will almost certainly be eligible at a National level of significance.

An examination of Table 3 will reveal that only a small number (7%) of the historic sites in Georgetown County have actually been recorded by archaeological surveys. The vast majority of potentially significant historic sites have yet to be found or recorded by professional investigations. It is also clear that the bulk of the recorded sites come from the Waccamaw Neck region. This area represents the center of recent development efforts, as well as an intensive rice cultivation area in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Even with extensive archaeological research funded by the development activities, relatively few of the historic sites on the Waccamaw Neck have been found. This discovery emphasizes the application of this study, as well as the importance of improving and refining the broad scale efforts identification and recordation efforts currently being conducted by most archaeologists. Simply put, this study suggests that far too many significant archaeological sites are going unidentified, in spite of archaeological survey.

Research and Problem Domains

While these investigations have been undertaken almost exclusively as a planning tool for those entrusted with the preservation of Georgetown County's heritage, it is clear that the collected information contributes to a wide range of research interests. These include genealogical research, an examination of site settlement patterns in the Georgetown area, the development of the agricultural base in the region, and overland transportation patterns, among others.

The collected information has been cross referenced by owner's name, where that information was available. It should be cautioned that often the cartographer used the name(s) shown on previous maps and this information was probably updated on an irregular basis. Ownership is particularly problematic in this area during and immediately after the Civil War. Therefore the information provided can be used only within a very broad temporal framework. Nevertheless, it provides a starting point for such research and provides some indication of where various owner's holdings were located.

The maps can also be used as the initial guide to a variety of site settlement studies. A number of the original maps provide very detailed information on plantation settlements, including the organization of structures, relationship of structures to road systems and other components of the plantation, arrangement of the various structures, and even arrangement of various landscape features, such as gardens, fields, and orchards.

Slave settlements are shown as single, double, and even triple rows, as possibly irregular clusters of structures, as arc arrangements, and even as square configurations. Some maps are sufficiently reliable for use in documenting the changing size and arrangement of settlements through time, perhaps documenting the same bimodal size distribution for Georgetown County that has been noted by Ferguson and Babson (n.d.: 25).

Figure 2 illustrates some of the settlement detail available in the maps used. It also serves to indicate that while the information offered in Table 3 is adequate for initial planning assessments, the original maps must be examined in the course of scholarly research.

This study may also provide base-line data for further research developing predictive models. At the present time there are limitations to the data, specifically the differential coverage of the coastal zone and Santee River area compared to the highlands of the county. It may, however, be possible to arrive at models applicable to specific areas of the county. The maps, for example, clearly indicate the importance of the river systems during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and also suggest that plantation size and density decreased as one moved away from the highly profitable tidal rice areas.

Both this study and the original maps may also be used to examine changing agricultural developments in Georgetown County. The gradual shift from indigo to rice may be seen in both the location of settlements through time, as well as the nature of agricultural fields illustrated on the various maps. The large percentage of improved rice land is especially noticeable on the navigation charts of the region. Finally, the maps are useful for research on the transportation patterns of the period. While the waterways have traditionally been viewed as the lifeblood of the area, it is clear that inland roads, no matter how poorly maintained, were considered sufficiently important to be shown on virtually all maps. The location of these roads, their change through time, and their eventual evolution into the major thoroughfares of the twentieth century can be easily traced. The location of ferries can be used not only in terrestrial research, but also in underwater investigations of commerce, shipbuilding, and transportation.

SUMMARY

This research has resulted in the identification of 810 probable historic sites in Georgetown County, at least 7% of which have not been previously recorded. The goal of this study is largely to assist preservation planners manage the historic resources of Georgetown County, although the resulting body of information has a variety of research implications.

It is also appropriate to re-emphasize several additional points made previously in this study.

- While there is very strong documentary evidence that the sites exist, and exist in the approximate location shown on the attached topographic maps, none of the sites identified by this project have been field verified.

- The presence of an identified site indicates that there is a strong probability that archaeological remains will be found in the area shown on the map, although the absence of a historic site on the maps in a project area does not mean that no significant archaeological or historic resources exist. The maps can be used to provide positive evidence of historic activity, but cannot be used to document the absence of historic sites.

- Related to the point above, it should be understood that when a ground disturbing activity is taking place adjacent to an encircled area there is no assurance that historically significant materials will not be encountered. These maps are intended to provide the best approximation of locations possible.

- While relatively few (7%) of the historic sites anticipated to be found in Georgetown County have already been found by archaeological investigations, the bulk of those already recorded have resulted from the various compliance studies associated with the intensive development of the Waccamaw Neck over the past 15 years. Even here, however, relatively few of the sites identified by period mapping have actually been identified by archaeological studies. Many others still await discovery or have been destroyed.

- While this study has provided exceptional information for the funds allocated, it is clear that the next stage should be carefully developed, cost-effective field investigations designed to record and assess the historic sites identified in this study. This will allow even better management of Georgetown's resources.

- Since the information contained on the topographic maps could be used to damage or destroy Georgetown's resources, the maps should be handled as confidential. Specifically:

- the maps should only be used by authorized individuals in the course of preservation planning and agency planning, and

- no photocopies of the maps should be provided to any individual, agency, or organization other than those listed in this study as participating members.

To assist in maintaining the confidentiality of these maps, they have been copyrighted by Chicora Foundation and are protected by law (Title 17 U.S. Code).
